DOWN ON CHOIRS.

The Presbyterian Banner of last week opens in regular forte style upon modern church chairs. After speaking of sundry tyrannies of which mankind is subject, the writer proceeds:
"But, after all, it is doubtful whether there is any tyranny among us more dreaded or more severe than that exercised by many of the choirs which sing and rule in our churches. Pastor, session and congregation stand in awe of them. The minister may be criticized, and complaints may be made of the elders with comparative impunity; but woe unto the unlucky one who will venture, even with hat in hand, and with pallid countenance and trembing lips, to intimate that the choir might at times so far condescend as to sing tunes in which the congregation can take part; that some of its members ought to behave themselves somewhat more seemly during prayer, the reading of the Scriptures and the sermon. So sensitive is the average choir as to its own undisputed sovereignty and the undoubted supremacy of each one of its members, that every now and then the principal of cohesion gives way and the entire concern goes to pieces, put ting the whole church into a fever of excite ment and often giving irremediable offence to some, until a new organization is effected. The immense capacity of choirs to cause dissatisfac-tion, give trouble, and interfere generally with the progress and happiness of the churches over which they exercise sway is beyond the power of human computation.

The success of choirs, such as we have described, in interfering with the labors of the pastor, destroying the effects of the sermon and in utterly smothering the devotional spirit of religious meetings, is beyond dispute; like some kinds of 'Patent Medicines'-they never fail.' Not many moons ago we were present at the meeting of an ecclesiastical body which was opened with an elaborate and able sermon. At the close of the discourse the hymn beginning, was announced. The pastor very properly invited the congregation to stand during the singing, and one thousand persons arose expecting to join in singing the hymn to the well-known tune of 'Greenfield,' with which it is inseparably entwined. But the choir would have no intrusion and impertinence as this; it would have things its own way, and it had, for it started off on a tune which no one in the large audience outside of the choir could sing, in which the choir itself made but an indifferent success, and which at best was unsuitable to the hymn. Great was the consternation in that church. The people looked at one another; some of the devout fathers and mothers were sad; others were startled as if some calamity was about to burst upon them; some of the young folks were disposed to giggle; while some people of more combative disposition felt as if it would afford them the highest degree of satisfaction to go into the organ loft at that moment and pitch leader, choir and instrument through the window into the street.

"In view of such things it cannot be thought strange that the rule of the choir is awakening a feeling that will soon manifest itself in some decisive way. Those who have borne the yoke of bondage most severely do at last, when op-position can no longer be endured, turn upon their tyrants and hurl them from their course with a violent attack upon the mascu line habit of tobacco using, and directed against this agreeable vice such a cannonade of reason, ridicule and invective as to force the conclusion that however nice the practice may be, it is indisputably paughty. He believed that "if the young men of America would give up cigars, consumption would be confined to women, in whom it would be produced by their unhappy methods of dress. The Poctor insisted that the use of tobacco lowered the nerve force as a necessary result, and injured the moral percep tion to such an extent as to affect the records of crime, and finally advising the male portion of his audience to "clean up and quit." Reaching finally the subject of his lecture, the Doctor eulogized "our girls" as the most beautiful in the world, and whose attractive leveliness had won for them signal success in the matrimonial markets abroad. Nevertheless, he still felt it his duty to say they were not so strong as were "our girls" of fifty years ago. Their lungs were smaller than those of their grandmothers, though he thought this might perhaps be arranged with reference to our own want of endurance compared with our grandfathers. He attributed it chiefly, however, to absurdities of dress. A Boston dressmaker, he said had confidentially informed him, after much persuading, that she never made any dresses for the better class of Boston ladies without stuffing the dress in one side or the other to fill up hollows produced by lateral curvature of the spine. He characterized the American gentleman's dress of the present day as physiologically perfect, and described in amusing fashion the efforts of the 'modern maiden', to put a 34 inch broad foot into a 21 inch shoe, and advocated in strenyour terms the wearing of woollen stockings
